Community Leaders Announce Webinar Series Aiming to Contextualize Chicago's Newest Migration Wave

CHICAGO — Today, Alianza Americas, the Latino Policy Forum, Center for Immigrant Progress, The Resurrection Project, and the National Immigrant Justice Center, announced a three-part webinar series titled "Contextualizing the Migrant Crisis Narrative," that will explore the root causes of migration to the United States, the response from the City of Chicago and the network of local communities, and the historical and recent wounds in the relationship between different marginalized communities in Chicago.

"The arrival of tens of thousands of asylum seekers to Chicago and other key cities in the U.S. over the past two years has exposed long existing societal failures in areas such as foreign policy, public welfare, immigration, immigrant integration, and ethnic and racial relations," said Executive Director of Alianza Americas, Oscar Chacón. "This webinar series will allow us to explore the factors causing people to be forced to leave their nations of birth, their decision to establish themselves in the nation they believe offer them the best hope for a better future, the way racist and xenophobic forces have manipulated their arrival to the U.S. to advance their political and electoral goals, and ways we can turn this situation into an opportunity for deep course correction. Chicago, as a leading global city, has a golden opportunity to lead itself and the nation into a smart, humane, and visionary solution to this challenge."

Over the past two years, hundreds of thousands of people have arrived at the U.S.-Mexico border seeking protection, part of an unprecedented global migration of people displaced from their homelands. However, recently, Republican governors in Texas, Arizona, and Florida started transporting many of these new arrivals, many of whom are legally seeking asylum, on buses and planes to Democratic cities, primarily Washington D.C., New York, and Chicago. The arrival of these migrants, in addition to the more than 11 million undocumented people who have been living in the U.S. for years, has exposed the serious flaws in the social policies meant to promote the wellbeing of all people that comprise U.S. society today. If handled appropriately, the situation presents us with an opportunity to demonstrate how communities and governments can rise to the occasion of providing dignified and humane treatment of people in vulnerable situations, but also help address historical tensions between marginalized groups.

Part one of this three-part series will dive into the various historical, economic, and political factors that force people throughout Latin America and the Caribbean to migrate to the United States, but also the challenges facing long-term undocumented immigrants who have been fighting for legalized status.

Panelists will be available for interviews immediately following each event.
